

Noir – Evernight

- Being the god of darkness and having to embody the element, "they" know the sorrow of every creature in the dark: the fear, sadness, pure terror, and unease it can cause. Some animals simply hate this time.
- But once the humans fell from Cox, the fear, anger, and sadness within them grew. They felt it more strongly than ever before. This overwhelming surge was something "they" could not bear. It disgusted "them" how far humanity had fallen. But over time, "they" saw something "they" had never expected: healing. Some humans dedicated their nights, their darkness, to quiet moments alone. They looked at the stars above and emptied their minds, healing from thoughts that haunted them.
- Noir knew they needed to focus on this aspect of themselves, so they blessed certain humans, giving them strength in darkness, giving them comfort, and showing others that the dark is not only frightening but also a beautiful place. And so "their" religion began. From a god torn apart to a god who loved "their" followers, "their" children, Noir wished nothing more than for them to heal, just as they once helped "them" heal "their" mind.

Teachings of Darkness

- Do not shy away from the night or the darkness, but find peace within it.
- Be yourself, in body and in spirit.
- Heal from the unspoken thoughts of the mind.
- Form families of blood and of bond. Darkness, a place so lonely and frightening, should not be faced alone. Even if one prefers solitude, having others close will always matter and should always be sought.
- Respect the other gods and their teachings, even if some, like Blikssem, are unfavourable to Noir's ways.

The Le Fay

- Noir, after being weakened and trapped in slumber for hundreds of years,
- was awakened by accident by Elizabeth Le Fay. Ever since then, Noir grew closer and closer to the family, finding a place to heal from "their" mental and physical wounds while becoming a guardian spirit to them.
- Noir will never forget what the Le Fays did for "them", helping "them" reconnect with humans and giving "their" teachings of the runes to a family "they" see as "their" own. "They" go from child to child, teaching "their" wisdom.
- "They" hope the family lives a better and more peaceful life, never expecting the Evernight Curse or the actions of the other gods to return.

- If the curse does return, "they" will protect the Le Fays with "their" life.